

In order to comply with the requirements for the publication of articles in the International Journal of Psychological Research, it is necessary for the authors to show, preferably in a note of copyright in the manuscript, the activities and relationships that could be interpreted as a conflict of interest, even if it is not believed that is no conflict or bias exists.

Compliance with the APA, the shares in a company through a mutual fund almost never represents a mutual conflict of interests that need to be known, while wages, research scholarships, research grants and personal actions do. They are also seen as potential sources of bias, that the authors are holders of copyright and/or beneficiaries of royalties from a product or service used or dealt with in the study, as well as the relationship of the authors with an entity or person involved in the development of the same.

Read the previous publication policy, select one of the following:

☒ Nor the author (s) of the article presented or his/their closets family (ies) has (have) a financial agreement or important membership with products and services used or dealt within the article or any other possible potential bias against another product or service.

☐ The author (s) of the submitted article (or an immediate member of their (s) family (ies)) have financial participation or important affiliation with products or services used or dealt within the article.

The author (s) of the submitted article (or an immediate member of their (s) family (ies)) have financial participation or important affiliation with products or services used or dealt within the article.

In case of choosing the second option, name at the end of this policy the product or service and the nature of relationship with each one of them (e.g., investments in stocks or bonus, scholarships, research, employment, property or society, consultancy fees or other remuneration).
